NC Live helps students, teachers

NEWTON—Students and teachers are in luck this fall, thanks to recent enhancements of the NC Live data base.

NC Live, a free service of Catawba County Library System, enables any library cardholder to browse the reference website for reliable resources for up-to-date information. The newest offerings are TOPIC Search and Science Reference Center

TOPIC Search is a current events database that allows researchers to explore social, political and economic issues, scientific discoveries and other popular topics that involve controversial opinions and viewpoints. Students will want to check this website for current events assignments as well research for theme papers and other school projects.

Students taking biology, chemistry, health or environmental sciences will value the new Science Reference Center on NC Live. The database allows easy access to many full-text science encyclopedias, books, journals and other sources. The Reference Center will also be helpful to teachers with articles correlated to both state and national curricula.

NC Live can be accessed from any computer at www.nclive.org The website simplifies the search for materials by directing you immediately to reliable sources that may be hard to find or otherwise available to paid subscribers. Thanks to support by the N.C. General Assembly, NC Live's many resources are available free to North Carolina residents. The required password is available from your library by calling 465-8663.
